DATE 18 May 019

Even though numbers have dwindled as many of our fellow hashers are enjoying la dolce vita abroad at the moment, over 20 brave punters have followed the call of Quatermaster and Family to defy the heat in Maenam, Soi 3.

At 4pm sharp, the circle was called and Quatermaster gave us the low-down of what to expect promising a steep hill for the running congregation.

Off we went right into the quarry, already thinking we might die of thirst before reaching the exit, but eventually coming out at the other end running into shaded woodland. Struggling a bit on the first check, we finally found our way and happily moved forward on what was indeed a pleasant and masterfully marked trail.

We all found our way back to the lager site in more or less an hour, including Pissbowl who had shown up late but still caught up with everyone, leaving behind Toblerone Man who decided to linger a bit longer in the mountains to cure a sudden spell of homesickness.

After having enjoyed a round or two of the barley pop, we gathered for the circle and unanimously voted for a good hash. Winkle then called in the running steward Tangerineman who didn't see a damn thing because he was practising his eremite skills in the elevated solitude of the Maenam heights. The walking snitch Chastitty, on the other hand, had to report Mother Cooker and Banana Straightener for excessive yapping on the trail.

Quartermaster despite of laying a superb trail, got the hash shit for sending his beloved wife Tutti Fruity out to lay the remaining paper and then having her collect all the hash signs which she was carrying like a pack horse while hubby was sitting in the shade sipping a cup of tea.

To round things off, we waved goodbye to Scouse Bastard and better half Mother Cooker who are off to a quick holiday in Singapore as well as to Banana Bender who will be heading down under for a bit while Banana Straightener will pay a visit to her family in Udon Thani.

Next week's trail will be a boutique run by Tubby Twinkie somewhere in Namuang.

A big thank you to Tutti Fruity for feeding the gathered devotees with a delicious chilli after the circle. From reliable sources we know that she has already opened a shop in Sevilla.
